Stewardship of Dreams

Stewardship is a fairly new term compared to many words in the English language. It speaks of our true nature and our place here while in human form. We are responsible for the survival and take care of all that we hold of value. What we hold as important we pass on from generation to generation. We are stewards of what we share in our dream of humanity. Many do not know the truth of our stewardship of dreams. As a result, we continue to care for the survival and maintain emotional suffering and pain. Whether we acknowledge our role or not, we are stewards of what we define as the meaning of humanity.

Parents, elders, friends, teachers, television, media and all we create express the intention of our stewardship. We teach through our expressiveness. We convey all we hold of value through our expression. Our actions communicate our intention. For eons, humanity has shared a dream of suffering, pain and discontent. Our stewardship has been the perpetuation of lies. We have been maintaining the survival of the lie that we are not divine, the lie that we are flawed, the lie that we are imperfect. We have been stewards of deceit. We have been teaching that we are separate, isolated and alone. We have been maintaining lies, calling them truth.

We are stewards of what we hold to be true. We can see truth and alter the focus of our stewardship. We can choose what we share to be of value.

The new stewardship is choosing service over self interest. Choosing service implies that we act on behalf of, in partnership with, or in the best interest of a grander scheme. What is self interest? Self interest is defending the concepts we have been taught which define; me, myself and I. Self interest is concentration on the mind based sense of self which seeks to hook our attention and have us worship it as if it were the truth of what we are. Self interest serves the egoic sense of self.

What is this grander scheme calling us to service? Many are experiencing a longing within themselves that there is something more to life. It is a feeling inside much like a yearning or faint calling. This urge is the divine truth of your aliveness which seeks authentic expression. We are being invited to listen to our true self. Our hearts are one and we feel the awakening, the awareness of our divine nature. We are being called to be true to our blessed life force. We are being asked to be our divine self. We are being summoned to be the messengers of peace, life and love. We are being asked to recognize truth of what we are. The yearning is a calling to be a steward of our oneness and communion with all life.

Humanity's destiny has been and always will be Stewardship of Dreams. The questions before us are; What dream am I focusing my intent on maintaining? What dream am I nurturing and keeping alive? How am I using my responsibility as steward of humanity's dream? Am I a steward of lies, or truth?

We are all stewards whether we acknowledge it or not.
